The oil men are feeling jubilant over the prospects this spring of developments in the Wyoming field. Small companies are being organized in various places, not so much to sell stock, but to raise sufficient money to test the territory. With the abundance of surface oil that exists in many localities, the chances are more than favorable that before the summer of 1888 ends in some well developed sections a forest of derricks may be seen with the paraphernalia of portable engines, pipe lines, stills, tubing and tanks. "Just as certain as the sun shines," said an intelligent Pennsylvania prospector yesterday, "that the oil in the head every time and using plain carpenter's English." Topographically, the surface is identical, and the quality and gravity of the oil the same as that of the now famous Baku region in Russia. Two thousand tank cars are now daily winding over the steep grades of those mountains from Baku to Batoum, a distance of 500 miles. The steamers of the Baltic and Caspian sea are run exclusively by this oil for fuel. Immense tank steamers are also being used for the transportation of crude oil. In fact, one-fifth of the petroleum supply of Europe is now furnished from that region where five years ago not a tenth was so supplied." Warning up with his subject, this gentleman continued: "I have seen the Baker oil, and the Wyoming oil in many localities will yield a larger per cent of illuminating oil and with a far better odor." "And more than all else, the diplomacy of the Standard oil company is on the wane in all Europe as well as in this country. The complaints and grievances of the people during the past decade are culminating in a series of court and inter-state commerce decisions by which law and justice are being promulgated." "The decision of the inter-state commerce committee two weeks ago in the case of George Hies against the railroad companies, by which the Standard must pay equal rates with all men, is a progression into this industry. It is quite absurd to assert that the oil of the Standard oil company shall or can be transported 1,000 miles to its supply station at Omaha, and then 1,000 miles west to other supply stations to compete with the simple process of refining oil at Omaha, Cheyenne or Rawlins, or at the wells. And besides, the fighting qualities too of the Standard are on the wane. Men cannot last forever. The case of Stephen V. Harkness occurred in Florida a few days since. He put $100,000 in the original plant of Rockefeller, Andrews & Flagler in 1871. The profits of that investment by the company during the last few years set up his relative, H. M. Flagler, at the same time with $30,000 as his interest. He also is building the $3,000,000 hotel at Ponce de Leon, Florida. They are becoming wearied and are more interested in the manipulations of their trust certificates at the stock exchange, with occasional relaxation of Florida, than the legitimate business of refining oil. And with the enormous expense attending all their operations, they can by no means today, everything else being equal, compete with the economical treatment of the crude oil of Wyoming by those who understand the business. There is a population of 15,000 people to supply with refined oil west of the Missouri river and tributary to the Wyoming field alone, and as to how they live shrewd operators are going to get there." THE CARPENTERS. Several Interesting Addresses Before the Union Last Night. A very largely attended meeting of the Omaha Carpenters' Union No. 58 was held at Central hall last night, over three hundred carpenters and a sprinkling of other mechanics being present. The meeting was called to order by William McGregor, president of the carpenters' union, who stated the object of the meeting to be to carry out the provisions of its constitution relative to the mental improvement of the members of the craft. With this object in view the committee had been charged with arranging for the meeting of several prominent citizens to address the union on the relations of labor and its condition in this city. The speakers were introduced as follows: Mr. Rosewater's address covered a labor troubles that have distressed all civilized countries in late years, the causes which make co-operation among workmen a necessity, the effects and incidents of its constitution relative to the mental improvement of the members of the craft. The mayor warmly endorsed the address and invited several prominent citizens to address the union on the relations of labor and its condition in this city.
